APPENDIX I

ABBREVIATIONS

Abbreviations are made chiefly in two ways. A. The beginning of the word is given, and at any point (after one letter, after all but one letter, or anywhere between) it is cut short with a period; so N. = North. Mass. = Massachusetts, syn. = synonym; the period serves to announce that it is needless to go further with the word. B. Some portion of the middle of the word is dropped out, the first and last letters being retained with or without others between; so wt = weight, hrs = hours, exrx = executrix, Abp = Archbishop; the writing of a period at the end of these on the analogy of that in A, though now usual, is to be deprecated; it is not a natural device (as in A), but artificial; it has very rarely the merit of announcing that the letters printed are not a full word, since that is nearly always clear without it (caps for capitals is one of the few exceptions); and it has always the demerit of failing to let the reader know that in the riddle he is called upon to read the last as well as the first letter is given him. There is also a mixed class in which the period at the end does convey that the end of the word is missing, but without implying (as in A) that all the letters up to that point are present; such are cg. = c(enti)g(ram), cf. = c(on)f(er), avdp. = av(oir)d(u)p(ois); the first two of these consist of the initial letters of their words' etymological elements, the last gives the first letter followed by such of the consonants as may suggest the general sound.

The method adopted in the following list is to omit the otiose period in accordance with the view expressed above; it is however to be understood that all abbreviations here given without the period may also be, and more frequently are, used with it. The U.S. State names, and those of British counties, should be mentioned; in the former we give the period or omit it as explained above (Vt, Va, Ky, for Vermont, Virginia, Kentucky; Mass., O., Oreg., for Massachusetts, Ohio, Oregon); in the latter we write the period after the s (Yorks., Leics., Hants., &c.) as representing shire. Viz and oz are preferred to viz. and oz. on the ground that the z itself represents a written terminal flourish.

APPENDIX II

UN-ENGLISH PRONUNCIATIONS

The words in the following Appendix list are those containing sound that (like the French nasals and the Scotch ch) are un-English and there fore not covered by our notation. In this appendix they are arranged i three lists: the words in their ordinary form; the anglicized pronunciation denoted by the same symbols as those used throughout the dictionary, bu with extra symbols to represent the un-English sounds; and the Frenc pronunciation in the alphabet of the Société Phonétique Internationale.

CONSONANTS

In the anglicized pronunciation the new symbol to be noted is cH which is used here to represent a soft guttural sound between sh and k heard in Scotch words like loch and common in German.

In the International Phonetic alphabet the consonants have their usua values, except the following:

j is the sound in Eng. young		ʒ is the sound in Eng. vision
ɲ " " Fr. digne		χ " " Scotch and Ger-
ʃ " " Eng. shout		man loch.

VOWELS

The nasal vowels characteristic of French are pronounced 'throug the nose', that is, with the soft palate at the back of the mouth lowere so that the breath passes through the nasal passages. The nasal vowe are four; and are approximately the nasalized forms of the vowels i English at, art, all, earl. In the anglicized pronunciation they are denote by ăn, ahn, awn, ĕrn, in the phonetic alphabet by ɛ̃ ɑ̃ ɔ̃ œ̃. These vowe are all heard in the phrase un bon vin blanc (œ̃ bɔ̃ vɛ̃ blɑ̃).

The vowels in the International Phonetic alphabet are as follows:

a as in Fr. patte		ɔ as in Fr. note
ɑ " pas		ɔ̃ " bon (= nasalized aw)
ɑ̃ " ban (= nasalized ah)		ø " peu
e " dé		œ " seul
ɛ " fait		œ̃ " brun (= nasalized ĕr)
ɛ̃ " fin (= nasalized ă)		u " tout
ə " de (obscure)		y " pu
i " ni		ɥ " buis
o " beau

ː denotes that the preceding syllable is long.
